Women of African Descent and Justice in World Societies: Volume 1: Imagining, Interpreting and Realizing Equality Katherine Bankole-Medina

We began this project, Women of African Descent and Justice in World Societies Volume 1, with the commitment to fully acknowledge and explicate the work of Africana women in world justice (Black women's work for justice in the African world and around the globe). While we understand that "Women of African descent (Africana, African, Black, and Afro-...) have a long history of seeking, theorizing, and ensuring justice in the world," we have very few volumes which endeavor to explore the subject as the purview of Black women. We expect the volumes to come to produce a coherent view of the theories and practices that guide future efforts in support of Africana Women and Justice Scholarship. We welcome authors from a variety of fields such as (but not limited to): history, law, anthropology, science-medicine-technology, literature, philosophy, media, politics, art, peace and conflict studies, development studies, ethics, cultural studies, sociology, mythology, psychology, theology and education.
