BRENDA'S GOT A BABY 2:THE NEXT GENERATION VINCENT MORRIS

Vincent Morris returns with the sequel to his best-selling novella Brenda's Got a Baby. We find the protagonist twenty seven years later, dealing with the issues that still affect her old neighborhood, a neglected school system, and people who have lost hope.

Brenda, now forty, married, and the newly made principle of the worst high school in the state, tries to turn around a learning environment filled with criminal behavior, desperation, and a lack of state funding.

Brenda endures a series of personal issues including an unfaithful husband with a fetish for younger women, a son out of touch with his blackness, a pregnant student she's taken into her home and media who try to drag her name through the mud.

Will Brenda be able to repair her marriage and save the school? Will her son be open minded enough to finally experience a black woman? Will the girl she's taken in from the street become another her or remain lost? Will Brenda be able to keep the media at bay when things about her past are revealed online?

The author is quoted as saying, "I was studying the books that are on the urban market and noticed black women don't have a hero in any. They don't have a woman who has gone from the bottom to the top without criminal behavior or ratchetness. I brought Brenda back out of a love for strong, black women. Brenda is what's needed in literature now."
