Epilepsy is the tendency to have seizures that start in the brain. The brain uses electrical signals to pass messages between brain cells. If these signals are disrupted, this can lead to a seizure.

Epilepsy is usually diagnosed when someone has more than one seizure. Seizures can vary a lot. They can affect your feelings, awareness or movement. Different types of seizures involve different things. These may include confusion, strange feelings, repetitive movements, 'blank' moments (where you are briefly unconscious), muscle jerks, sudden falls, or convulsions (jerking movements while unconscious).

Sometimes other conditions can look like an epileptic seizure, for example fainting. Doctors will check for other conditions as well as epilepsy before you are diagnosed. See more about diagnosis.

If you have epilepsy, you may feel ok about it, or you may have questions or worries. Your epilepsy and your choices in life may feel like big issues.

This book is here to provide you with a basic and sound understanding of what this condition is about and what you can do about it in order to help friends, family or yourself. It is a short read packed with useful information which will give you a complete overview of the subject.

Read what other people have to say

"Epilepsy is a serious illness that is very misunderstood by many people and not fully understood yet by even medical professionals. This book gives a short yet very clear and details overview of what epilepsy is along with the symptoms"

-Michael Naylor -

"A family member who recently moved into my home had a series of epileptic seizures unexpectedly. This book is quite informative and has clarified several questions and misunderstands regarding the symptoms and treatment of the disease. Not only has it helped me to understand the disease process, but I now have insight into treatment and management".
