Star Wars (Little Books About Big Things): The Unauthorized Trivia Book Damon Brown

Damon Brown explores the far reaches of the Star Wars universe, unearthing a treasure trove of entertaining facts, anecdotes, trivia, and quizzes. George Lucas's Star Wars films are among the most successful ever made, and possibly the most influential. Beyond those six films, Lucas's creation has sprawled into everything from bestselling novels to popular toys and video games, and even an infamous, little-seen made-for-TV Christmas special. In this illuminating, easy-to-read book, Brown unearths a trove of little-known facts about both the making of the Star Wars films and the fantastic, addictive, faraway universe they take place in. Here are a few of the facts you'll find inside:

- Lucas supposedly modeled Emperor Palpatine after President Richard Nixon.
- Although the first Star Wars cost $13 million to make, it earned $100 million within its first three months.
- The largest known collection of Star Wars memorabilia can be found at a nonprofit run by a former Lucasfilm executive. Called Rancho Obi-Wan, this attraction holds more than 300,000 Star Wars-related pieces in a 9,000-square-foot space that formerly housed a hatchery for 20,000 chickens.
- In 1977, Star Wars didn't just look original, but it sounded original, too. Lucas insisted on realistic sounds, having his technicians record real-world jet engine noises to echo through the film's starships.
- Mark Hamill was in a severe car accident right before he finished filming Star Wars Episode IV: A New Hope, fracturing his left cheekbone and nose.
- In Star Wars Episode V: The Empire Strikes Back, Yoda was essentially a hand puppet with several engineers manipulating its eyes, ears, and other parts via remote control. Ever wonder how the sound of Darth Vader's signature heavy breathing was made? Or the actual size of the Death Star model in the original Star Wars? You'll find the answers inside . . . and many more!
