April is a schoolteacher who seems to be stuck in an emotional rut. Two years before, the man she loved and expected to marry stood her up at the altar and ran off with her sister. April has not been able to get over the sense of betrayal and abandonment that this caused her.

One day a new kid named Pierre is added to her third grade group. The little boy is a handful. He is disruptive during class, and can't read, write, or add. In a desperate attempt to find out why this child is so out of control, she sets up a parent-teacher conference. Only the father shows up and he seems aloof. When she asks about the boy's mother, he offers no information.

April takes matters into her own hands and begins tutoring Pierre after. That's when she discovers that what she had thought was the result of bad parenting was a broken hearted child searching for love
